Introduction by Yaquie Moeller Dept. of CMLLC

This documentary follows filmmaker Terry Gilliam (Brazil, 12 Monkeys) as he attempts to create his dream film: The Man Who Killed Don Quixote.

We see Gilliam assembling his film crew and preparing production for what was his highest budgeted film to date. Immediately plagued with an improbable series of disasters ranging from scheduling conflicts, budget cuts, studio and location problems – we see the production trainwreck in every possible way, with the eventual result of a stopped production, blocked by the film's rights being owned by overseas insurance companies.

93 min English, Spanish, French with English Subtitles
Released in 2002 in the United Kingdom
